

The scientific center of the Russian academy of education, based at the Russian university of traditional art crafts, will study issues related to involving children in traditional art crafts²

The scientific center of the Russian academy of education (RAE) will be established at the Russian university of traditional art crafts (RUTAC). An agreement to this effect was signed by the president of the Russian academy of education, RAE academician Olga Yuryevna Vasilyeva, and RUTAC rector Olga Petrovna Rybnikova.

"The opening of the RAE scientific center at the Russian university of traditional art crafts marks an important step in systematically developing science in the field of traditional applied arts. Its work will assist scientists and educators not only in deeply researching a number of unique areas but also in building a continuous system for educating the younger generation. Preserving and multiplying our national cultural heritage is our key mission", stated Olga Yuryevna Vasilyeva.

"The establishment of the RAE scientific center once again confirms the university's unique status as the sole institution in Russia that trains artists in traditional art crafts. This collaboration will give an extra boost to the research carried out at RUTAC within the scientific school of Valentina Fyodorovna Maksimovich. I'm confident that together we'll turn a new page in the history of traditional art crafts and pass them on to future generations", added Olga Petrovna Rybnikova.

Among the tasks facing the new RAE scientific center are conducting fundamental and applied scientific research in the field of vocational education in traditional art crafts, as well as research related to involving children, adolescents and young people in traditional art crafts as part of Russia's cultural heritage. Additionally, the center will develop innovative educational and enlightenment projects in this area and integrate them into the activities of educational institutions nationwide, as well as organize thematically significant public and cultural events.
