and artistic lace-making created by students of the Russian university of traditional art crafts within the framework of the Second World Public Assembly

On September 19, 2026, within the framework of the Second World Public Assembly program “New World: values that unite”, a fashion show of the Russian university of traditional art crafts’ clothing collection took place at the World Trade Center.

The runway featured unique works of art – garments with artistic embroidery and artistic lace-making, created by the students of the University and its branches (Figs. 1-3³).

Each piece is the result of artistic handwork and a modern interpretation of the regional and historical, artistic and technological, compositional, coloristic and aesthetic traditions of artistic lace-making and artistic embroidery

Quoting Andrey Belianinov, General Secretary of the World People's Assembly: "The Second World Public Assembly is a new step in the development of international public initiatives based not on confrontation, but on dialogue, creativity and the support of traditional values. It is fundamentally important that it is Russia that acts as the initiator of such a unifying format, open to representatives of different countries, cultures and views"⁴.

Significantly, the Russian university of traditional art crafts, by presenting the splendor of Russia's artistic heritage within the framework of an unparalleled international exhibition activity, fosters an ethical perception of our country and promotes its traditional spiritual and moral values.
